WORDS FROM THE FACULTY

Dr. XU Xin

Acting Director of the China and Asia-Pacific Studies Program (CAPS),
Cornell University

Here at Peking University international summer school, we have a very diverse student body. There are some students who are major in politic science or history, but more students actually have very diverse educational backgrounds. It's different, dynamic, but I enjoy the learning environment exactly because of this diversity.

Assoc. Prof. QIN Xuezheng

School of Economics, Peking University

China is already the world's second largest economy, and also the world's largest exporter, and manufacturers. So the spectacular economic growth during the past several decades generates a lot of interest around the world. So many students, no matter whether they are in school, or in the industry, they want to know more about China. So my course hopes to provide them with such knowledge, so they can have a better understanding of the current status as well as future challenges and polices of China's economy.

Xu Liang, Assistant ProFessor

School of International Studies, Peking University

We really want to expand students' understanding of Chinese state owned companies by bringing them to the company to have a in-person interactions with the management team of the company. That way, before they leave China and conclude their class, they will have a more concrete understanding of what these companies are doing in Africa and why they do it.

Cheng Ying, Assistant Professor

School of Foreign Languages, Peking University

We hope that our students can base their understanding of Africa-China interactions on concrete knowledge in the economic, political, and cultural context for both China and Africa rather than ideological assumptions. We encourage students to adopt an open interdisciplinary approach and to use these approaches to create more nuanced understandings of Africa-China interactions and to think about or reflect on their own contributions to the knowledge production in the context of the Global South.
